Paula, quick brain-dump before I go on leave Thursday. Please don't let these slip.

- Greenfield Farm short delivery (the tomatoes, 150 kg), still open. I sent them the GRN but no credit note back yet. Chase them.
- Sunrise Bakery rolls overcharge €750. I emailed Harry there, he "needs to check with finance." Same story every quarter.
- The Prime Cuts Butchers meat one, it got logged in a bit of a rush and I have a feeling it's in there twice. Can you sanity-check before we chase it? It got messy.
- Meadowvale Dairy, I'm honestly not sure there's a real claim there. I couldn't get the numbers to line up and ran out of time. Leave it unless they come back to us.
- Sweet Treats, they swear they delivered the gummy bears, but I can't find the paperwork our side. I don't think we can prove anything, so probably drop it.

Everything's in the tracker (the usual sheet). Statuses are a bit all over the place, sorry. I update it when I can.

I just don't have time to go line-by-line through every invoice against every PO. I catch what I catch. We both know we're leaving money on the table, especially the volume rebates. I literally never get to those. I only chase a claim when a supplier emails us or something looks obviously wrong.

Thanks Jenny. Honestly my worry is the stuff we don't catch. When you were out sick in February nobody touched this sheet for two weeks and a couple of credit windows nearly closed on us.

Also Mark (finance director) asked me at the last review "how much are we actually recovering vs. how much is owed to us?" and I had no answer. We don't track what we should have claimed, only what we happened to chase.

Can we talk about this when you're back? Feels like it shouldn't come down to one person and a spreadsheet.

Agreed. If it helps the conversation: the suppliers with rebate deals (flour, the drinks one, packaging, dairy), and I almost never check whether we've actually crossed the threshold. That's where I'd bet the real money is, and it's exactly the part I never get to.

Let's just automate the sheet or something. Anything.
